Morgan Pym appears to be in his early 30's, but was in fact born in 1322 AD, a monk who fell in love with a servant girl Katrina, who lived near the monastery. When Katrina caught the plague, Morgan sold his soul to cure her, but when his deal ended 10 years later, she died, and an embittered Morgan went to work for the Devil collecting souls, rather than go to Hell himself. More than six centuries later, Morgan meets Maya, a junkie/sex-worker who reminds him of Katrina, and in trying to help her, he rediscovers his own humanity. He makes a new deal with the Devil, who allows him to try to help his clients make amends for the bad luck caused by their bargain in the final 2 days before their deal ends. Not all of Morgan's clients will choose to seek redemption; of the ones that do, many will fail. But Morgan will never give up trying to prove that everyone, no matter what they've done, can earn redemption...and that perhaps one day that may even include himself.
